Dogs can learn to be quiet

Salt Lake County Animal Services
Humane Education Specialist

Canine noise pollution is one of the most irritating problems faced by a animal control workers. It annoys both dog owners and others of the community. If you think your dog has a problem with barking, here are some tips and information that might help you solve your problems.

First, recognize that barking is a very natural and normal instinct for dogs. Barking is a form of communication with other canines and with their pack.

It isn't desirable to try to stop all barking, just the barking that annoys or causes problems. This usually means barking continuously when left alone in the house or outside or barking without stopping for more than a reasonable period of time.

Dogs that bark continuously are ones that have a behavior problem. These behavior problems are due to being left alone for long periods of time, boredom, frustration, as well as being frightened.

Dogs may also bark because the owner inadvertently trained them to do so. For example, I thought it would be great to teach my dogs to howl. Now whenever a siren goes by my house, my dogs howl. This becomes very inappropriate, especially at 3 a.m.

If every time the dog "ruff, ruffs," you get up and let him out or talk to him, or feed him, the dog soon learns the value of barking to get what he wants.

So how do you train your dog not to bark but still have a good watchdog? Start by praising your dog for being quiet. We often forget or ignore this important training technique. But we must do it repeatedly. Dog obedience instructors recommend rewarding dogs for appropriate behavior (in this case, being quiet) 10 times more often than we reprimand for barking. So when the dog stops barking, praise and reward.

The basic training sequence for stopping extended periods of barking involves simple steps. First, allow the dog three to five barks. Come and investigate why the dog is barking. After all, it's just doing its job of alerting you to unusual noise or perceived danger.

Beyond sounding the alarm and being calmed down, if the dog continues to bark, speak directly to the dog with a commanding, "QUIET!" If the animal still doesn't get the idea, demonstrate by placing your hand on top of the muzzle and gently pressing downward toward the chest.

Repeat the command word "quiet," hold for a moment, and then release the dog and praise for being quiet.

This training technique helps the animal to associate the word "quiet" with not being able to bark. It is very important when training your dog to be consistent, patient and NON-ABUSIVE. Anger, yelling and hitting do not belong when you are working and living with animals.

Also make sure your animals get regular exercise every day. For larger dogs or active dogs exercise twice a day for at least 20 minutes is best. Smaller dogs can be exercised once a day.

If you have a problem dog, exercise it twice a day. The exercise helps to release built-up energy and reduces boredom and frustration so that when you are gone for long periods of time the animal will more than likely sleep. Also, get your dog into obedience school. The instructors will help you to work with your animal appropriately so that you will have a well-behaved dog at home.

There are several obedience schools to choose from in our valley. Salt Lake County Animal Services offers a Good Dog Manners Workshop throughout the year; our next class will begin March 4, 1992.

If your dog does not seem to respond to these training techniques, there are several other training techniques to try. Please call Salt Lake County Animal Services education program for a free brochure to help stop the barking problem, or if you need more information on dog obedience classes.

If you have a question about health, behavior problems, laws, etc., regarding wild or domestic animals, please write Humane Education Department, Salt Lake County Animal Services, 511 W. 3900 South, Salt Lake City, UT 84123 or call 264-2247.

PET OF THE WEEK

Deejay

Deejay, a large neutered male cat, is outgoing and will "talk" to anyone who takes the time to pet him. He is just one of many cats at the shelter that would make great companions or family pets. Cats sleep about 18 hours a day, don't need to be walked and don't bark, so they are the pet of choice for many working people. If you are interested in adopting Deejay or another pet, visit Salt Lake County's North Animal Shelter, 890 N. 300 West.

This week's 'Plus' people nominations

Here are some reader nominations of Wasatch Front residents who make a difference in their communities through volunteer work or other such service:

• Marie White:
White volunteers time to feed the homeless at the St. Vincent De Paul Center. She is described as someone who is always giving to and helping those in need.

• Susan Lowe:
Lowe, an AT&T employee, has been volunteering at a Salt Lake kindergarten class one day a week for the past five years.

• Larry and Della Wood:
The Woods help their neighbors, especially the elderly and the sick, with all sorts of tasks. They also put up a large Christmas display each year for the enjoyment of the community.

• Vera Struck:
Struck is described as a person who has helped several people achieve success. She has an excellent talent at being able to encourage people to be hopeful.

• Burton Larsen:
Larsen helps three single women in his neighborhood by keeping sidewalks and driveways clear of snow, raking leaves and other yard work. He and his wife perform many kind deeds for their neighbors.

• Russell Condie:
Condie helps out his neighbors in many ways, particularly one senior citizen who lives alone, by putting up his own Christmas decorations in their houses.

• Hollie Pettersson:
Pettersson, 18, is described as a welcome ray of sunshine in everyone's life. She is the student body secretary at Cyprus High School and is known to regularly take time to build up the self-esteem of others.

• Lynn Olsen and Sherry Salmn:
Olsen and Salmn care about the environment and have been assisting Hawthorne School in various projects.

• Grant Hodgkinson:
Hodgkinson, of Murray, is a regular volunteer at keeping snow removed from the yards of widows and single women in his neighborhood. He will do his snow removal in secret and doesn't care about taking the credit for such a service. He has been doing this for at least the past several years.

• AARP Taxaide program volunteers:
More than 160 volunteers in Utah are assisting with the AARP Taxaide program this year. Each person will provide more than 40 hours of volunteer assistance during the next several months.

Tell us about the people who are a "plus" to the community!

The "Plus" section is looking for nominations from readers about Wasatch Front residents who make a difference in the community. For example, we're looking for the volunteer who regularly visits a nursing home, the volunteer who teaches reading at the library or the person who helps widows in your neighborhood.
