Dogs can learn to be quiet

Salt Lake County Animal Services
Humane Education Specialist

Canine noise pollution is one of the most irritating problems faced by a animal control workers. It annoys both dog owners and others of the community. If you think your dog has a problem with barking, here are some tips and information that might help you solve your problems.

First, recognize that barking is a very natural and normal instinct for dogs. Barking is a form of communication with other canines and with their pack.

It isn't desirable to try to stop all barking, just the barking that annoys or causes problems. This usually means barking continuously when left alone in the house or outside or barking without stopping for more than a reasonable period of time.

Dogs that bark continuously are ones that have a behavior problem. These behavior problems are due to being left alone for long periods of time, boredom, frustration, as well as being frightened.

Dogs may also bark because the owner inadvertently trained them to do so. For example, I thought it would be great to teach my dog to howl. Now whenever a siren goes by my house, my dogs howl. That becomes very inappropriate, especially at 3 a.m.

If every time the dog "ruff, ruffs," you get up and let him out or talk to him, or feed him, the dog soon learns the value of barking to get what he wants.

So how do you train your dog not to bark but still have a good watchdog" Start by praising your dog for quiet. We often forget or ignore this important training technique. But we must do it repeatedly. Dog obedience instructors recommend rewarding dogs for appropriate behavior (in this case, being quiet) 10 times more often than we reprimand for barking. So when the dog stops barking, praise and reward.

The basic training sequence for stopping extended periods of barking involves simple steps. First, allow the dog three to five barks. Come and investigate why the dog is barking. After all, it's just doing its job of alerting you to unusual noise or perceived danger.

Beyond sounding the alarm and being calmed down, if the dog continues to bark, speak directly to the dog with a commanding, "QUIET." If the animal still doesn't get the idea, demonstrate by placing your hand on top of the muzzle and gently pressing downward toward the chest.

Repeat the command word "quiet," hold for a moment, and then release the dog and praise for being quiet.

This training technique helps the animal to associate the word "quiet" with not being able to bark. It is very important when training your dog to be consistent, patient and NON-ABUSIVE. Anger, yelling and hitting do not belong when you are working and living with animals.

Also make sure your animals get regular exercise every day. For larger dogs or active dogs exercise twice a day for at least 20 minutes is best. Smaller dogs can be exercised once a day.

If you have a problem dog, exercise it twice a day. The exercise helps to release built-up energy and reduces boredom and frustration so that when you are gone for long periods of time the animal will more than likely sleep. Also, get your dog into obedience school. The instructors will help you to work with your animal appropriately so that you will have a well-behaved dog at home.

There are several obedience schools to choose from in our valley. Salt Lake County Animal Services offers a Good Dog Manners Workshop throughout the year; our next class will begin March 4, 1992.

If your dog does not seem to respond to these training techniques, there are several other training techniques to try. Please call Salt Lake County Animal Services education program for a free brochure to help stop the barking problem, or if you need more information on dog obedience classes.

If you have a question about health, behavior problems, laws, etc. regarding wild or domestic animals, please write Humane Education Department, Salt Lake County Animal Services, 511 W. 3900 South, Salt Lake City, UT 84123 or call 264-2247.

PET OF THE WEEK

Deejay

Deejay, a large neutered male cat, is outgoing and will "talk" to anyone who takes the time to pet him. He is just one of many cats at the shelter that would make great companions or family pets. Cats sleep about 18 hours a day, don't need to be walked and don't bark, so they are the pet of choice for many working people. If you are interested in adopting Deejay or another pet, visit Salt Lake County's North Animal Shelter, 860 N. 300 West.
